Auditorial Pleasures

I had heard people talking about this band, but I never had a chance to really listen to their stuff. They've been classified as rock, and emo. Emo? Whatever. This whole emo thing is a bizarre fad, but okay.

MCR, as My Chemical Romance is often referred to as, doesn't call themselves emo, they just rock (as in the style). I am currently listening to their album called "Three Cheers for Sweet Revenge."

My favorite songs are "Ghost of You" and "The Jetset Life is Going to Kill You." The other songs are growing on me. (Fungus music!)

The most interesting thing is that my sister had me go to their website (it was she who had me listen to their CD), and wow, the free stuff for fans you can get there. You can listen to three songs for free, and even watch their videos if you want to. Not just samples, but the whole thing. I thought that was awesome. The video to "Ghost of You" is really powerful.

Sometimes the singer is difficult to understand, but in other songs you can really hear how well he can sing. I wonder if he sings badly on purpose, or if he's just bad at singing in certain ways. I don't know.

But if you wanna hear their music, check out "Ghost of You" first at their website. www.mychemicalromance.com

Updates and Stuff

Okay well, I was going to take a few hours today to write this, and maybe even sufficiently rant about, something, I dunno, but alas, you get something I posted in my blog instead, and me giving an update. Hopefully I will have time for comments (you'd think I'd learn to write comments at the time that I read e-APA, but oh no, I don't bother to listen to myself when I display that kind of logic).

I had some serious issues with a family member today which caused me to be unable to get to this until it was technically after the deadline. So I'm hoping that Peter is still asleep while I'm typing this up or is busy or something since I kinda wanna get this in for this month since I had a different sort of drama happen.

My hard drive failed and I was without a computer for over two weeks. It was painful to live without my machine for a while. Luckily I was able to save most about 95% or so of my stuff. Huzzah!

However, once more I have very little time for comments, even though I've read and enjoyed what people have written, and appreciated the time ya'll took to comment on my last ish.

I got a very part time job, only eight hours a week - paid weekly $6.75 minimum wage, at Kmart restocking shoes. It's mundane, but simple, and is certainly better than nothing. Hopefully something else will turn up soon, or I'll get lucky and be given more hours. I also managed to get government aid for once. I hated it when I was pregnant I couldn't get it but people who couldn't speak English could. . . gripe

I have all these comments I want to make, but right now, I have no energy to do it after the retarded family drama that happened (between me and a sibling), and everything afterwards. I know that if I try to do it now I'll end up making a mess of it. I'll make it up to you all though!

I WILL have comments next time, gosh darn it!
